Seeking to understand a paediatric world. The holistic needs of children have long eluded the practise of child psychiatry. Even after the age of reason, children cannot understand themselves and rarely live as they imagine. Moreover, the psychology of the child is shaped by the reality of the child's world, which may be other than the child had originally understood. The distance between the truth of their inner world and the practicality of their everyday lives has been called 'the challenging paradox of childhood'. Recent advances in neuroscience have brought with them challenges to the practice of child psychiatry. Does cognitive neuroscience offer a way through the paradox of childhood? In an age when we are able to image and control the very properties of our brains, can we advance the science of psychiatry and help children? This presentation will draw on recent advances in neuroscience to explore the claim that seeking to understand the internal and external worlds of children has become a necessity for child psychiatry. 2,5-Diphenyloxazole-based derivatives as Ir(III) catalysts for the hydrosilylation of olefins: solution studies and quantum-chemical studies. Four new 2,5-diphenyloxazoles (DPO's) and one 2,5-bis-3,4-dihydro-3,4-dihydroxy-6-phenyl-1-phenyl-1H-1,2,4-triazole (DPT) have been tested as catalysts in the hydrosilylation of olefins under silver and lead catalysis. The catalytic system based on 2,5-bis(4-tert-butylphenoxy)-3-p-tolyl-1H-
