•Silver-chloride colloid Silver-chloride (AgCl) colloids are highly reflective colloidal suspensions of silver halide particles. These are obtained by reducing silver ions with halogens and any excess of silver is precipitated as silver chloride. The size of the silver halide particles determines the wavelength of light the particles reflect. The optical properties of silver halide colloids are different from those of gold or other metals. Uses The most common applications are the preparation of photographic emulsions and the formation of three dimensional block-copolymer constructs. To study the expression of neurofilament (NF) protein, vimentin, and melanoma-associated antigen (MA) in canine transitional cell carcinoma (TCC) and correlate the data with proliferative index and histopathological grade. Twenty-three canine TCC tissues and 11 normal urinary bladder mucosas obtained from different organs were used for immunohistochemical analysis. Neurofilament staining of all TCC specimens and nonneoplastic mucosas showed a heterogeneous distribution pattern. Vimentin staining was positive in 18 of 23 TCC tissues and all nonneoplastic mucosas. MA expression was higher in poorly differentiated carcinomas, compared with well- and moderately differentiated tumors. These results indicate that canine TCC expressed the three studied markers, indicating that they could be used to study canine TCC biology.Lactarius sambucinus Lactarius sambucinus is a species of milk-cap mushroom in the order Russulales.
